The most common option is for punters to select one horse to win the race, with the 'field' taken for second and third. To figure out how much this bet costs, multiply the last two numbers in the field. For example; if the field costs of 13 runners, a banker-field-field trifecta will cost  $13 \times 12$ , equalling \$156. Punters will opt for a percentage bet in order to drop that price down. Ideally, a more favoured runner is selected to win with punters hoping two long shots fill the remaining two positions, which will make the trifecta more profitable. A roving banker is simply the same bet, but you receive three separate bets as your banker has been placed in first, second and third on your ticket.
