Finally, there is also the Big Bet mode, which will cost more to activate but instead of five paylines, they player will get 27. This obviously greatly increases the chances of winning. To the untrained eye, there appears to be no apparent difference between one gaming platform and another. Casual players may be beguiled by the aesthetics of an online slots site, perhaps even an online bingo room, without understanding all the details. A cursory look at an online gaming site indicates that they are up and running, and clearly functional. If so, they must be legit right? Wrong! The online poker boom of the early 2000s spurred dramatic interest in online gaming. Within no time at all, online bingo rooms, online casinos, and slots sites were popping up all over the place. Dozens of companies – legit and otherwise – rushed to offer their products to eager players. Unfortunately, the technology powering many of these platforms was suspect. Safety and security protocols, encryption technology, RNGs, secure payment options and the like were noticeably absent. An even bigger problem was the lack of regulatory authority with these online gaming sites. Most of the time, they skirted legal constraints by setting up shop in shady locales with a strong online presence to boot. This begs the question: How can players differentiate one online gaming site from another? The basics of this pokie are quite simple. The goal is to match identical symbols across the win line, with most wins requiring three-of-a-kind to score a prize (players can also win their money back by matching two in a row of any symbol). You can win small prizes by matching three carrots or three cigars, or score bigger wins with bars and sevens. The biggest prize on the reels comes by hitting three cars, which pays 500 credits – up to $5,000 AUD if you're playing the maximum of $10 per spin.
