Craps has its roots in the English game Hazard. Hazard itself is a relatively old game which dates back to the Crusades. Craps was heavily influenced by French gamblers and was brought to New Orleans, Louisiana by Bernard Xavier Philippe de Marigny de Mandeville, a gambler and descendant of wealthy Louisiana land owners. During this time, Craps was known as Crapaud, a French word meaning "toad". The name references the toad-like position which the player assumed while crouching over a sidewalk to play in a group. Street-style craps became popular amongst soldiers during World War II who played it using an army blanket as a shooting surface.
